INTRODUCTION

The Live Art Development Agency (LADA) is seeking a motivated and detail-oriented individual for a 6-month Archive and Collections Placement. This placement offers a unique opportunity to gain hands-on experience in collections management, archival practice, and research within a leading arts organisation.

Key Outputs of the Placement:

- Conduct an audit of collection holdings, documenting existing items, identifying gaps, and assessing condition and accessibility.
- Undertake desk-based research to support strategic development of the archive and collections.
- Develop an outline Collections Development and Acquisitions Policy to guide future acquisitions and management of LADA's holdings.

About the Collection

Our core resource, housed at the LADA space in Bethnal Green, is the world's largest collection of research materials on Live Art, containing over 8,000 items that include out-of-print books and rare documentation.

It is a free, open access research facility for artists, students, curators, academics and other arts professionals and can be used to view artists' work, read publications, undertake research projects, and find out general information about Live Art, opportunities and networks.

Including DVDs and Live Art related videos, our Live Art Research Collection is for many people one of the only opportunities to view documentation of performances that they were unable to experience 'live'.

“

'LADA's collection is singular in prioritising practices of the past (through the archive) and the present (in powerful programming)'

- Samra Mayanja, Study Room Artist in Residence 2025

WHO WE ARE

Live Art Development Agency (LADA) is a registered charity based in London, dedicated to the development of Live Art research, practice and infrastructure.

Founded in 1999, LADA has a long history of supporting contemporary culture's most radical and inventive artists and ideas. Our specialised resources, projects and publications have been driven by an unwavering commitment to Live Art as a cultural strategy that makes space for the experimental processes, experiential practices, and the bodies and identities often excluded from traditional art and performance contexts.

In October 2024, Mary Osborn joined LADA as Director, bringing with her a bold new vision for the organisation that builds on LADA's significant legacy. With a specialism in artist development, Mary is committed to building programmes and partnerships that serve, nurture and sustain fiercely defiant artistic practices.

WHAT WE DO

As a 'Development Agency', our mission is to develop an expansive Live Art ecology that prioritises learning, practices resistance, and invites possibility about what art can be and do.

We do this through three strands:

Developing Live Art Research

Our primary resource is the Live Art Research Collection, housed at LADA's Study Room in Bethnal Green. Containing over 8,000 items from the 1960s to the present day, including an audio-visual archive of interdisciplinary live and performance practices, the Live Art Research Collection is the world's largest collection of research materials on Live Art.

Alongside our online resources for artists, students and professionals, our ever-expanding collection remains the only open-access resource of its kind. Our Live Art Bookshop expands our research engine, distributing a curated selection of hard-to-find publications, media and limited editions, including artists' books and LADA's own titles.

The Live Art Research Collection is activated by annual artistic research residencies, workshops and our broader public programme, connecting practices of the past with those emerging in the present and future.

Developing Live Art Practice

We create professional development programmes for artists and practitioners, with a focus on peer-to-peer development and shared process. Through residencies, commissions and bespoke opportunities, we support practitioners to centre collaboration and experimentation in their practice.

This includes LADA's national peer-to-peer professional development programme Do It Together (DIT), which seeks to create the conditions for artists to explore ideas, aesthetics and socio-political challenges together, and build a nation-wide support network for radical practice.

Developing Live Art Infrastructure

Our mission is to build sustainable national and international partnerships so that artists working within the multiplicities of Live Art can take risks, experiment and develop diverse audiences. This includes co-ordinating Live Art UK, a network of 25 partners who seek to sustain and develop the Live Art ecology. We also work in partnership with Higher Education institutions to share knowledge and embed Live Art within wider cultural and academic contexts.

By connecting independent artists, grassroots spaces, major institutions and higher education we are helping to shape a more sustainable, inclusive and courageous infrastructure for Live Art.

CORE VALUES

We are custodians:

We care for the materials that live in our Live Art Research Collection, so that present and future generations of artists and researchers can access them. We do this with respect for the past, not reverence. We take a critical approach to how knowledge is gathered, stored and shared, and are committed to access, transparency and critique of power.

We are curators:

We listen and respond to our current and ever-evolving cultural contexts. We make decisions based on emerging ideas that we learn about through conversations with artists and researchers, and in dialogue with what we hold in our collection.

We are collaborators:

We find joy in working with artists, practitioners, researchers and organisations. We think, strategise and take action together, with trust and respect for each other's work. We are particularly interested in approaches to co-learning and collaborative research.

We are cross-disciplinary:

We are a meeting point for explorations of liveness, and for practices that have been historically excluded from traditional art contexts. We are curious about what emerges when different disciplines meet and are excited by fluidity and experimentation. We welcome artists and researchers who share our desire to commune around the potential of this work, and are eager to hear what Live Art means to them.

We are change-makers:

We do this work because we want to create change. By change we mean a more equitable and more liveable cultural, social and political reality. We know that meaningful and sustainable change takes work, and we are committed to robust policies and strategic actions.
